a) Recruitment of personnel.

- ✓ After an organization's structural design is in place, it needs people with the right skills, knowledge, and abilities to fill in that structure. People are an organization's most important resource, because people either create or undermine an organization's reputation for quality in both products and service.
- ✓ Recruitment is the process of inviting qualified applicants by way of issuing notification in the newspapers, television media, online and on social networking media so as to fill up job vacancies.
- ✓ Recruitment of employees is administered by two major sources, i e are recruitment of employees through internal sources and recruitment of employees through external sources.

Objectives/purposes of conducting recruitment process.

1. To create a talent pool of candidates to enable the selection of the best candidate for the organization

2. To attract and engage people it needs to achieve its overall organizational objectives.

3. Recruit the right people who will fit into the organizational culture and contribute to the organizational goals.

4. Helps to evaluate the effectiveness of various recruiting techniques and sources for all types of job applications.

5. Begin identifying and preparing potential job applicants who will be appropriate candidates.

6. Meet the organizations lawful and social commitment with respect to the synthesis of its workforce.

HRM focuses on obtaining the appropriate type and number of manpower necessary to attain organization goals.

Ways of internal recruitment

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

1. As the aim of recruitment is to fill up the vacancies,, some may adopt internal recruitment to fill up the vacancies by way of transferring an employee to the place where job is lying vacant if transferring employee is found to be fitted for the job position.
2. Giving promotion to the vacant position if an employee found to be fitted for the promotion post,
3. HR hiring Managers Seek for employee referrals from existing employees generally to fill up key posts or to the post which deal with confidential information and to the sensitive positions with a view not to take any risk by handling such positions to unknown persons,
4. Inviting retrenched employees if they were retrenched or laid off by an organisation due to shortage of working capital, low sales, and fall in demand for goods they were producing or breakdown in machinery. It is a rule that has to be followed by an organisation to give first opportunity to the retrenched employees to fill up vacancies if organisation position is restored and if it needs to add staff.
5. Some organisations offer compassionate appointments to the family members of retired employee, deceased employee or total permanently disabled employee as a result of an accident for filling up of vacancies arising out of the said cause. Even governmental organisations offer compassionate appointments to fill up vacancies.

Ways of external recruitment

External recruitment is the process of inviting job applicants who do not belong to or anyway related with an organisation which means inviting outside candidates. As that of opting for internal recruitment by some organizations depending upon the above said situations, some organisations opt for external source of recruitment depending upon their circumstances and demands which are as follows-

1. Internet or online recruitment which has become popular and major source of recruitment since finding or inviting job applicants is easy when compared to other source of external recruitment. Nowadays HR hiring managers are recruiting through social networking and it has become widely popular for finding suitable candidates.

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

2. If organisation needs well experienced and competent or talented candidate to fill up key vacancy, in such case HR hiring managers will look at competitor organisations to find and to attract such candidate.
3. Employment agencies are the oldest source for finding large number of job applicants as they get enrolled or get registered for employment opportunities.
4. Campus or college recruitment is one of the sources of external recruitment from which fresher's and talented pool with attitude of learning new skills and knowledge relating to emerging technologies are available. Therefore organisations can have fresh talented people on board for adopting change and to easily impart the skills the organisation requires.
5. Executive search firms or consult
6. Unsolicited candidates - It is universal truth the rate of unemployment is on the rise as educational institutions are generating graduate disproportionately to the rate of employment opportunities in the market. Consequently, job seekers themselves are desperately approaching companies for finding job openings.

b) Personnel selection.

- ✓ Selection is the process of selecting a qualified person who can successfully do a job and deliver valuable contributions to the organization.

- ✓ After the recruitment, employee selection process begins for identifying right person by using written test on relevant subjects, oral tests, group discussions, final job interview and background verification for checking the genuinity and credentials of the candidates for filling up of the job which is lying vacant in an organisation.
- ✓ The requirements for a selection system bare knowledge, skills, abilities, and other characteristics, collectively known as KSAOs.
- ✓ Personnel-selection systems employ evidence-based practices to determine the most qualified candidates, which can include both new candidates and individuals within the organization.
- ✓ Common selection tools include:

i) ability tests (cognitive, physical, or psychomotor),
ii) knowledge tests,
iii) Personality tests, s

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

iv) Structured interviews- the systematic collection of biographical data, and work samples.

- ✓ Development and implementation of such screening methods is done by human resources departments or some organizations may hire consultants or firms that specialize in developing personnel-selection systems .
- ✓ Two major factors determining the quality of a newly hired employee are: predictor validity and selection ratio.

i) The predictor cut-off distinguishing between passings and failing scores on a selection test—people with scores above it are hired or further considered while those with scores below it are not. This cut-off can be a very useful hiring tool, but it is only valuable if it is actually predictive of the type of performance the hiring managers are seeking.

ii) The selection ratio (SR) is the number of job openings (n) divided by the number of job applicants (N). When the SR is equal to 1, the use of any selection device has little meaning, but this is not often the case as there are usually more applicants than job openings. As N increases, the quality of hires is likely to also increase: if you have 500 applicants for 3 job openings, you will likely find people with higher-quality work among those 500 than if you had only 5 applicants for the same 3 job openings.

This document is available on studocu

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

Objectives of personnel selection.

1. To establish employee recruitment and selection systems for hiring the best possible employees consistent with the organizational needs

2. To maximize the potential of each employee in order both to attain the organizational goals and ensure individual career growth and personal dignity

3. To retain employees whose performance helps the organization realise its goals and release those whose performance is unsatisfactory.

4. To ensure organizational compliance with state and central government laws that is applicable to the personnel management function.

c). induction /orientation procedure.

- ✓ Employee orientation, also commonly referred to as; orientation or organizational socialization, is the process by which an employee acquires the necessary skills, knowledge, behaviours, and contacts to effectively transition into a new organization (or role within the organization).

- ✓ Orientation is the first steps toward helping a new employee adjust himself to the new job and the employer. It is a method to acquaint new employees with particular aspects of their new job, including pay and benefit programmes, working hours, and company rules and expectations.
- ✓ Orientation is a reasonably broad process, generally carried out by the human resources department, that may incorporate lectures, videos, meetings, computer-based programs, team-building exercises, and mentoring.
- ✓ The underlying goal of incorporating these varying tactics is to provide the employee enough information to adjust, ultimately resulting in satisfaction and effectiveness as a new employee (or an existing employee in a new role).

Objectives of induction/orientation

1. To reduce initial anxiety that all new staff feel when they join in a new organization.

2. To familiarize the new employees with the job, people, workplace, work environment and organization.

3. To facilitate outsider-insider transition in an integrated manner.

4. To reduce exploitation by unscrupulous co-workers.

Benefits of induction/orientation

1. Reduces anxiety nervousness, absenteeism and employee turnover.
2. Helps minimize reality or culture shock that new employees undergo on joining a new organisation.
3. Helps integrate the new employees into the organizations and foster the feeling of belongingness to the new organization.
4. It binds the new comers and the present employees in a team.

d). Training and development of personnel.

- ✓ Employee development helps organizations succeed through helping employees grow.

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

- ✓ Human resource development consists of training, organization, and career-development efforts to improve individual, group, and organizational effectiveness.

- ✓ In addition to providing training for new or inexperienced employees, organisations often provide training programmes for experienced employees whose jobs are undergoing change.
- ✓ Large organisations often have development programmes which prepare employees for higher level responsibilities within the organisation.
- ✓ Training and development programmes provide useful means of assuring that employees are capable of performing their jobs at acceptable levels.
- ✓ On-the-job and off-the-job training techniques are used to develop the technical and soft skills of the employees. A good training programme should include should include a mixture of both types of both types of methods.

- ✓ On-the-job Methods
  - Job Rotation
  - Coaching
  - Job Instruction
  - Committee Assignments
  - Internship
- ✓ Off-the-job Methods
  - Classroom Lectures

C). Compensation of employees

- The HRM should ensure fair, equitable, and adequate remuneration of personnel for their contribution to the organisation's objectives.
- Alternative names for compensation are payment, salary, wage or remuneration.
- But grammatically there is a difference between compensation and remuneration.
- Compensation is used for payment of amount in case of accident or death of an employee during the course of employment and such employee should not be under the influence of alcohol at the time of accident or death.
- Remuneration and salary can be used interchangeably when the period of payment is monthly to an employee.
- Wage is used when period of payment is daily to an employee.
- Payment of compensation or remuneration is the fundamental duty of an employer, failure to fulfil his or her duty shall be liable for penal action in the court of law and will be interpreted as exploitation of workers and shall be viewed seriously by the court of law.

- Similarly payment of compensation or remuneration is the right of an employee for the work done and deprived employee can seek for justice in the court of law.
- There are employment and labour laws for every country which govern the payment of compensation and remuneration for workers, procedure and methods for payment of compensation in case of accidents and deaths.

Importance of compensation

1. Compensation or remuneration is the basic motivating factor for any employee. It provides an important incentive in motivating employees to higher levels of job performance and to higher paying jobs in the organisation.

2. It also acts as primary factor for retention of employees in an organisation which is the task for any human resource manager.

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

3. To ensure job satisfaction among employees. Unjustified or improper remuneration will trigger dissatisfaction and sometimes may lead to unrest among the employees which may lead to strikes that will hurt organisation badly in all aspects.

4. To avoid legal liabilities. If an organisation does not compensate its employees, it will have to face legal action and penalty which is a cost for an organisation; consequently it causes damage to the reputation of organisation and employer branding which involves lot of effort to build it.

- ❖ Compensation affects staffing in that people are generally attracted to organisations offering a higher level of pay in exchange for the work performed.

D). Maintaining good industrial relationships

- ✓ Human resource management aims at reducing conflicts, promoting industrial harmony, providing fair deals to workers, and establishing industrial democracy.
- ✓ Maintaining labour relation is an art and one of the most important functions of human resource management in order to maintain peace and harmony in an organization for avoiding conflicts and smooth running of an organisation.

- ✓ There are no hard and fast rules for maintaining labour relations since it is an art and should be managed according to the situations and circumstances.
- ✓ Without maintaining proper labour relationships there was no organization that did its business smoothly.
- ✓ The term “industrial/labour relations” refers to interaction with employees who are represented by a trade union.
- ✓ Unions are organisation of employees who join together to obtain more voice in decisions affecting wages, benefits, working conditions, and other aspects of employment.
- ✓ With regard to labour relations, the personnel responsibility primarily involves negotiating with the unions regarding wages, service conditions, and resolving disputes and grievances.

E). Record keeping.

- Personnel manager collects and maintains information concerned with the staff of the organization for decision-making processes such as promotion.
- This function involves recording, maintaining, and retrieving employee related information for a variety of purposes.
- Records which must be maintained include;
  a) application forms,
  b) health and medical records,
  c) employment history (jobs held, trainings achievements, promotions, transfers, lay-offs),
  d) seniority lists,
  e) earnings and hours of work,
  f) Absenteeism,
  g) Staff turnover and any other employee data.
- Complete and up-to-date employee records are essential for most personnel functions.

Personnel records provide the following:

Downloaded by Patrick Ngobiro (pngobiro@gmail.com)

1. A store of up-to-date and accurate information about the company's employees.
2. A guide to the action to be taken regarding an employee, particularly by comparing him with other employees.
3. A guide when recruiting a new employee, e.g. by showing the rates of pay received by comparable employees.
4. A historical record of previous action taken regarding employees.
5. The raw material for statistics which check and guide personnel policies.
6. The means to comply with certain statutory requirements.

F). Personnel evaluation and performance appraisal.

- Different types of activities are evaluated, such as performance and personnel policies to limit deviations from the recommended standards.
- Performance appraisal function monitors employee performance to ensure that it is at acceptable levels.
- Human resource managers are usually responsible for developing and administering performance appraisal systems, although the actual appraisal of employee performance is the responsibility of supervisors and managers.

- Besides providing a basis for pay, promotion, and disciplinary action, performance appraisal information is essential for employee development since knowledge of results (feedback) is necessary to motivate and guide performance improvements.
- In order to assess the performance of employees, HR managers have to establish performance standards, communicating established performance standards to their employees, measuring the actual performance of employees by using various methods of performance appraisal and finally comparing actual performance of employees with the established performance standards so as to identify the gaps in the performance of employees.
- It gives a clear picture of employees performance status thereby HR manager will develop a plan for filling up of gaps in performance of employees by way of providing suitable and focused training for improving the skills in employees.

- When it comes to period of conducting performance appraisal, it all varies from organisation to organisation; it could be annually, half yearly, quarterly, monthly and some organisations conduct performance appraisal on regular basis mostly with the support of human resource information systems.

f) Staff separation.

- Usually an employee leaves an organization after several years of service.
- The permanent separation of employees from an organization requires discretion, empathy and a great deal of planning.
- An employee may be separated as a consequence of resignation, removal, death, permanent incapacity, discharge or retirement.
- The employee may also be separated due to the expiration of an employment contract or as part of downsizing of the workforce.
- Organizations should never harass the employees, especially in the case of resignation, just because they are quitting the organization.
- In fact, a quitting employee of the organization must be seen as a potential candidate of the future for the organization and also the brand ambassador of its HR policies and practices. However, many organizations are still treating their employees as "expendable resources" and discharging them in an unplanned manner whenever they choose to do so.

- Each organization must have comprehensive separation policies and procedures to treat the departing employees equitably and ensure smooth transition for them. Further, each employee can provide a wealth of information to the organization at the time of separation.
- Exit interviews can be conducted by the HR department to ascertain the views of the leaving employees about different aspects of the organization.

Definition:

- Separation is a negative recruitment. It may be in the form of resignation, dismissal or discharge, suspension, retrenchment or lay-off.

Facts When someone feels it is time to bid goodbye, in most cases the person is seen as a villain. By some magic, all his good qualities suddenly seem to evaporate and the person is made to feel like a traitor to the cause. Unless someone has been unprofessional, it is important that those who leave do so with good feelings for the company and its people. At the end of the day, former employees who have been treated gracefully at exit time, can be powerful brand ambassadors

- A severance agreement is a contract, or legal agreement, between an employer and an employee that specifies the terms of an employment termination, such as a layoff.
- Sometimes this agreement is called a "separation" or "termination" agreement or "separation agreement."

Reasons for Separation of Employees

- An employee can leave the organization for any reason which he deems fit for seeking separation.
- Separation is classified basically into two types. These are:
  1. voluntary separation and
  2. Involuntary separation.
- Voluntary separation refers to the separation of employees on their own request, while involuntary separation means the separation of employees for organizational reasons which are beyond the control of the employees.

1. Voluntary Separation Voluntary separation, which normally begins after a request is placed in this regard by the employee, can happen due to two reasons: professional reason and personal reason. .

- Professional reasons Employees may seek separation when they decide to seek better positions, responsibilities and status outside the present organization.
- Efficient employees would seek to expand their realm of knowledge and skills continuously by working in different capacities/positions in various organizations. In their quest for greater responsibility, power and status, they may seek separation from the organization.

- Personal reasons The important personal reasons for voluntary separation are relocation, for family reasons like marriage, and health crisis of family members, maternity and child-rearing. For instance, when working women get married, they often prefer to settle in the partner's place of occupation. Similarly, an employee may seek voluntary separation to look after the child or parent.

3. Involuntary Separation As mentioned earlier, an involuntary separation is caused by the factors which remain beyond the employees.
   However, these factors may be classified broadly into health problems, behavioural problems and organizational problems.

Health problems Major health problems crippling the employees may make them invalid or unfit to continue in the profession. For instance, accidents causing permanent disabilities and illness of the employees like brain stroke and other terminal illnesses can lead to their involuntary separation. Death of employees is another factor which results in their involuntary separation.

Behavioural problems An employee's unruly behaviour within the organization may also lead to his involuntary separation from the organization.

When the employees behaviour is unethical or violates the code of conduct, the organization may initiate disciplinary actions, which may eventually result in his termination.

This may constitute an act of involuntary separation. Consistent failure to reach performance goals by an employee can also result in his involuntary separation.

Organizational problems Organizational problems are another important factor that contributes to the involuntary separation of employees.

The poor financial performance of an organization may cause it to terminate the services of some of its employees as part of cost control measure. Such terminations are also classified as involuntary separation.

Similarly, automation, organizational restructuring can also result in employee termination, discharge or layoff, broadly called involuntary separation.

2. Advisory functions

- HRM has specialised education and training in managing human resources.
- He is an expert in his area and so can give advice on matters relating to human resource of the organization.

Definition of management

- Originally the term management comes from a Latin word 'manus' referring to the driver controlling a team of horses pulling a cart.
- The examples of definitions of management as defined by different scholars are that it is the:

- Process of getting things done through other people.
- Process through which resources in an organization are made available and effectively used in accomplishing the organizational goals.
- Process of working with and through individual and groups and other resources to accomplish organizational goals or objectives.

- Planning, organizing, coordinating, commanding and controlling.
- Process of creating and maintaining of an internal environment of an organization in which individuals and groups perform effectively towards the attainment of the organizational goals.
- Process of integrating (bringing together) all the organizational aspects for instance the structure, people and technology in order to achieve organizational goals.

- Note the most important elements to note in the definitions of management are process, resources, utilization and goals.
- As health records and information managers, it's important to understand the managerial functions because of the following reasons:
